A Well Advertised Poultry Food.
A satisfied customer is the best advertisement any business house can have. Such expressions as are given in the following letter from Asahel Puffer of Jericho, Vt., are indicative of the kind of advertising "Page's Perfected Poultry Food" receives. It also accounts in a large degree for the enormous sales of this staple article. Here is the letter: "I wish to keep the agency for 'Page's Perfection Poultry Food' the best I ever used, and the neighbors all speak very highly of it."

Any one sending his address on a postal card to C. S. Page, Hyde Park, Vt., and mentioning this paper, will receive by mail, free, postpaid, a sample package of "Page's Perfection Poultry Food."

It is surprising how few farmers keep sheep. If they knew how little it costs to maintain a small flock, almost every general farmer would have one. Further than this, a small flock always supplies wool, which can be sold at a time when there is little ready money coming in. This income is exceedingly convenient and should always be considered. Wool and mutton can be produced at almost no cost and with very little trouble. With most farmers it is simply a matter of getting started. Begin with eight or ten sheep, and if the farm is small do not let the flock exceed thirty. One of this size can be easily maintained and will bring in more ready money and be a source of greater satisfaction than any live stock that can be kept.— Orange Judd Farmer.

A Practical Feed Hopper.
A very practical feed hopper can be made from the medium sized shoe box, which is wide and about three feet high, by dividing it into parts and nailing one-half inch netting on one side, with a bulge in it so there is quite a space left for chopped clover, to be picked out through the wire. The shutters can be put on each side so that it can remain open or closed and opened when wanted, or, by connecting with wire, they can all be opened at once by lever or by alarm clock attachment at any time desired.—Exchange.

Home Grown Seedlings.
He figures the cost of starting a pine plantation on the basis of $2 per thousand for home grown seedlings, and in many localities wild ones growing in the vicinity of large groves may be had for the digging. Pine seed is expensive, but any one can collect his own seed and grow the trees.

Among the Suitable Lands.
During the six weeks in which Professor Rane has held the office of forester he has been requested to inspect, report and outline plans on about 4,000 acres, mostly small farm wood lots.
The value of these may be improved by careful handling in such a way that the growth will be quickly renewed after each cutting. Among the lands suitable for planting to pine he mentions abandoned farms, stony hill pastures, burned over wood lots, brush lots, sandy barrens and wet land.
Each tract of land must be considered according to the local conditions in planting to forest trees.—American Cultivator.

SEED POTATOES.
Northern Grown or Second Crop Southern Preferred.
The general preference for northern grown or second crop southern grown potatoes for seed purposes is well sustained by practical results. The usual reasons given for their superiority over the ordinary home product are the benefits to be derived from "change of seed," more congenial soil and location, tending to perfect growth, and the better condition in which the seed potatoes thus grown keep over winter.
Northern grown potato seed is best for the north and southern second crop for the south, as well as for intermediate localities, apparently for the same reason. Recent experiments in northern Europe, where the potato crop is of the utmost economic importance, tends to confirm the prevailing impression that seed pieces cut from the "seed end" are likely to be more productive than similar cuts from the umbilical or stem end. The reason given is that the seed end or growing point of the tuber is younger and less mature than the stem end, formerly attached to the plant, and that not only are the "eyes" or buds more numerous on a given area, but the stored food materials are more soluble and in a state of higher vitality.—Rural New Yorker.

Heading Young Apple Trees.
It is better to start head trees two feet from the ground. This gives an opportunity to wrap trees with wire cloth to prevent injury from mice; also more room to apply mulch the first six years, when it is necessary to apply close to the tree. After trees come into bearing the fruit will bear down limbs of those headed two feet high so that some of the fruit will touch the ground, especially if trees are pruned very little after planting.
The pruning as practiced by many growers, I firmly believe, causes excessive wood growth on remaining branches, and this tends to defer fruit production. I base my opinion on the fact that Northern Spy trees produce two bushels of fruit at six years from planting on the nonpruned plan. Cherry trees I prune very little even at planting time. The trees start better without.—G. G. H. in Orange Judd Farmer.

PROFIT IN PINE TREES.

Wornout Hill Land For Raising Timber Trees.

The new forester of Massachusetts, Professor W. F. Rane, formerly of the New Hampshire Agricultural college, takes a rosy view of the possibilities of forestry in New England. He believes that much of the wornout hill land could be profitably used for raising pine and other timber trees.

In the course of his address at the American Association of Farmers' Institutes he declared that "if typical New England lands adapted to forest growth can be stocked at a price not exceeding $12 an acre in forty years one can easily expect to net at least $100 an acre, even at present prices.
With white pine it should be worth at least $150 or more an acre. One man at North Amherst, Mass., tells me he has netted $500 an acre in between fifty and sixty years growing chestnut timber."
